Overview

Amsterdam is the capital of the Netherlands, built around a ring of 17th-century canals lined with narrow, gabled houses. The city is compact and mostly flat. Most visitors get around on foot, by bike, or by canal boat rather than by car. It suits a long weekend well, with the historic core, canal ring, and major museums all close together.

The city carries a strong artistic legacy, holding major collections of Rembrandt, Vermeer, and Vincent van Gogh. It also has a famously open, easygoing culture, visible in its cafes, markets, and canalside terraces. Anne Frank hid here with her family during the Second World War. The house where she wrote her diary is now one of the most visited sites in the world.

When to visit

Spring and autumn are mild, summer is warm with long daylight hours, and winter is cold and often wet with a chance of snow.

Plan around King's Day on 27 April, when the whole city turns orange for street parties, live music, and a huge open-air market. It's the biggest annual event, and hotels book up months ahead.

Top sights

A Anne Frank House is the wartime hiding place of the Frank family, preserved with the annex where Anne Frank wrote her diary. Book tickets online weeks ahead — they sell out fast.

B Rijksmuseum holds the Netherlands' national art collection, including Rembrandt's The Night Watch and major works by Vermeer, inside a grand 19th-century building.

C Van Gogh Museum houses the world's largest collection of the artist's paintings and letters. It traces his life from his early, dark studies to his final, vivid canvases.

D Dam Square is the city's historic central square, flanked by the E Royal Palace, a former town hall turned royal residence still used for state events.

F Vondelpark is Amsterdam's largest inner-city park, popular for picnics, open-air concerts, and simply watching the city slow down.

G Jordaan District is a former working-class neighborhood, now a maze of narrow streets, boutiques, and small art galleries along quiet canals.

H Begijnhof is a quiet, hidden courtyard of historic almshouses just steps from the busiest shopping streets. It holds one of the city's oldest surviving wooden houses.

What to experience

- Rent a bike and cycle along the canals like a local — it's the way most Amsterdammers actually get around, not just a tourist activity.
- Take an evening canal cruise, when the bridges and canal houses light up.
- Browse the floating flower stalls of the Bloemenmarkt for tulip bulbs and seeds to take home.
- Warm up in a "brown cafe" (bruin café) — a small, wood-panelled Amsterdam pub — over a jenever or a beer.
- Join the street parties on King's Day, when the whole city turns orange and the canals fill with private boats.

Day trips

A few good day trips lie within easy reach of the city, best reached by train or bus.

- A Haarlem — a canal city with its own historic core and a well-regarded Frans Hals museum, about 15 minutes by train. A relaxed alternative for a slower afternoon.
- Zaanse Schans — a cluster of working windmills, wooden houses, and craft workshops on the Zaan river, about 45 minutes by train and bus. Amsterdam's most popular windmill day trip.
- Volendam and B Marken — a former fishing port and a small peninsula village, both known for traditional dress and wooden houses, about 30-45 minutes by bus. Easy to combine into one trip.
- C Edam — a small, quiet cheese town with canals and a summer Wednesday cheese market, about 35 minutes by bus.
- Keukenhof Gardens — one of the world's largest flower gardens, known for its tulips, open only from mid-March to mid-May, about 45 minutes by bus.

Where to explore

Just outside the city, Haarlem makes an easy extension to an Amsterdam trip, with its own compact old town and canals, reachable by a short train ride.

Getting there

- By air: Amsterdam Airport Schiphol (AMS) is the main gateway, about 15 km southwest of the centre. Direct trains run to Amsterdam Central Station in about 15-20 minutes for around 5-6 €.
- By train: high-speed and international trains connect directly to Brussels, Paris, London (via Eurostar), and cities across Germany. They arrive at Amsterdam Central Station in the heart of the city.
- By bus: long-distance coach services connect Amsterdam to major European cities, arriving at stations on the edge of the city rather than the centre.

Getting around

- Public transit: trams, buses, a metro, and ferries run by GVB cover the city. Tap a contactless bank card or phone directly on the reader when boarding — no separate ticket purchase needed for short stays. GVB journey planner
- Taxi / ride-hailing: regular taxis and ride-hailing apps operate, but distances in the centre are short enough that they're rarely worth it.
- On foot / cycling: the centre is flat and compact, easily walkable. Cycling is how most locals get around — rental bikes are widely available, though shared cycle lanes take some getting used to.

Getting around on foot & by bike

WALKABILITY

High

The compact, flat centre is easy to explore entirely on foot.

CYCLING INFRASTRUCTURE

High

Dedicated bike lanes and widely available rental bikes make cycling the way most locals get around.

Driving

- Is a car worth it?: No. The centre is compact, largely pedestrian- and bike-priority, and parking is scarce and expensive. A car only helps if you're heading well outside the city.
- Parking: paid street parking and a handful of car parks ring the centre, paid via app; expect several euros per hour.
- Restrictions: much of the historic centre has narrow streets closed to through traffic, and canal-side parking is tightly restricted.

Food & drink

Amsterdam's food scene ranges from traditional Dutch snacks to a large international dining scene shaped by the country's colonial history, especially Indonesian food.

For a casual bite, head to the food stalls and small kitchens inside Foodhallen, a converted tram depot with dozens of vendors under one roof. Or browse the cheese and herring stands at Albert Cuyp Market in De Pijp. Rijsttafel — an Indonesian-style spread of small dishes — is worth seeking out at one of the city's long-established Indonesian restaurants.

What to eat & drink

BREAKFAST

Chocolate Sprinkles on Bread · Hagelslag
Chocolate sprinkles eaten on buttered bread, a beloved and slightly playful Dutch breakfast tradition.

DINNER

Stamppot
Mashed potatoes mixed with a vegetable such as kale or endive, traditionally served with smoked sausage.

SNACKS & STREET FOOD

Bitterballen
Deep-fried, breaded meat croquettes, a classic Dutch bar snack usually served with mustard.

Dutch Herring · Haring
Raw or lightly salted herring, traditionally eaten by the tail, often with chopped onion and pickles.

Fries with Mayonnaise · Frites
Thick-cut fries served with mayonnaise rather than ketchup, a Dutch and Belgian staple.

Kibbeling
Bite-sized pieces of battered and deep-fried white fish, typically served with a garlic or tartar sauce.

SWEETS & DESSERTS

Stroopwafel
A thin waffle made of two layers of baked dough with a caramel syrup filling, best eaten warm.

Apple Cake · Appeltaart
A dense, spiced apple cake, usually served with whipped cream alongside coffee.

Poffertjes
Small, fluffy pancakes served with butter and powdered sugar, a popular market and fair treat.

DRINKS

Jenever
A traditional juniper-flavored spirit and the historical precursor to gin.

Safety & health

Amsterdam is generally safe for tourists. Pickpocketing is common in crowded spots like Dam Square, Central Station, and on trams — keep bags zipped and valuables out of back pockets. Bike theft is common too; always lock rental bikes with the provided lock. Cannabis is sold legally in licensed coffeeshops, but public drug dealing near the centre, especially in the Red Light District at night, is best avoided.

History

Amsterdam grew from a small fishing village around a dam on the Amstel river. By the 17th-century Dutch Golden Age, it had become one of the world's richest trading cities. The Canal Ring Area of Amsterdam, now a UNESCO World Heritage Site, was laid out in concentric rings during this boom to expand the city outward. Dam Square takes its name from that original dam. The Royal Palace beside it was built as a town hall at the height of the city's wealth, on a scale meant to rival any European palace.

The 20th century brought darker history. During the Second World War, Nazi occupation forced the city's Jewish population into hiding or deportation. That story is told at Anne Frank House, where the Frank family hid for over two years before being discovered in 1944.

1. Amsterdam Centraal Station
2. Oude Kerk
3. Dam Square
4. Anne Frank House & the Jordaan
5. The Western Canal Belt
6. Begijnhof
7. Leidseplein
8. Rijksmuseum & Museumplein

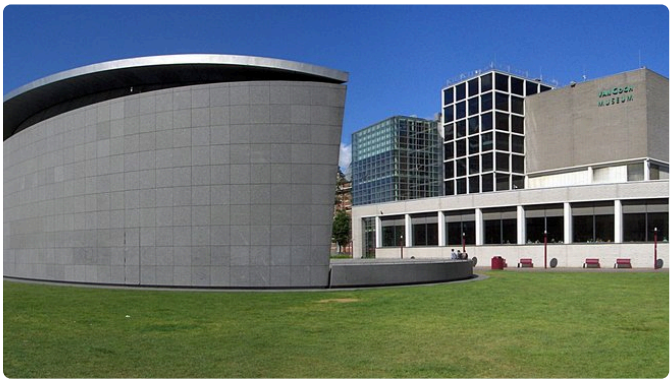

This walk links Amsterdam's essential sights into one route through the historic center: Centraal Station, the oldest building in the city amid the Red Light District, Dam Square, the Anne Frank House on the edge of the Jordaan, a stretch of Golden Age canal architecture, the hidden Begijnhof courtyard, the lively Leidseplein square, and the Museum Quarter's Rijksmuseum. Eight stops, roughly ninety minutes on foot including stops. The walk starts at Centraal Station, Amsterdam's main transit hub.

Amsterdam Essentials

Amsterdam's core is defined by its 17th-century canal ring and world-class cultural institutions. This collection features the Museumplein hub, home to the Van Gogh Museum's extensive collection and the Stedelijk's modern designs. Historical depth is found at the Anne Frank House and the 17th-century Portuguese Synagogue. Iconic landmarks include the De Gooyer windmill, the tallest wooden mill in the country, and the Renaissance-style Westerkerk. Beyond the center, the 13th-century Muiden Fortress offers medieval history, while the A'dam Lookout provides 360-degree views of the city's evolving skyline.
