Overview

Görlitz is a town in Saxony on the river Neisse, on the border with Poland. The old town was not destroyed in the Second World War. It has Gothic, Renaissance, Baroque and Art Nouveau houses in a very small area.

The town suits a stay of one or two nights. You can walk everywhere. The Polish town of Zgorzelec lies across the river, so you can visit two countries in one day. Görlitz is also a popular film location. Wes Anderson shot The Grand Budapest Hotel here.

When to visit

Late spring, summer and early autumn are the best months. Days are warm and the old town is pleasant to walk. Summer brings some rain. Winters are cold and grey, with short days.

The Silesian Christmas market, the Schlesischer Christkindelmarkt, fills the Untermarkt in Advent. It is the best reason to come in winter.

History

Görlitz was first mentioned in 1071 and grew into a trade town in the Middle Ages. It lies on an old road across Upper Lusatia, and merchants built the houses around the Untermarkt.

Rich citizens built The Holy Sepulchre in the 15th century. The mystic Jakob Böhme lived and worked in the town in the early 1600s.

Upper Lusatia passed to Saxony in 1635. After 1815 Görlitz belonged to Prussia. In 1945 the border on the Neisse split the town. The eastern bank became Zgorzelec in Poland. The old town survived the war nearly intact. Many buildings were restored after 1990.
