Overview

Gothenburg is Sweden's second-largest city, built where the Göta River meets the sea. Compared with Stockholm's polish, it has a relaxed, unpretentious character, with a compact center of canals, tram lines, and 19th-century grid streets that are easy to explore on foot. It suits travelers who want a mix of city sights, seaside air, and a strong coffee and food culture without the crowds of the capital.

The city is also linked to the beloved troubadour Evert Taube, born on the nearby island of Vinga, and to Volvo, founded here in 1927. It works well as a weekend break or as a stop between Stockholm and Copenhagen, and is reachable by ferry from Denmark and Germany as well as by air and rail.

When to visit

Summer (June to August) is mild with long daylight hours and is the best time to visit; spring and autumn are cool and changeable; winters are dark and cold, with occasional snow. Kulturkalaset, a free citywide culture festival with concerts and street performances, fills the center every August — worth timing a trip around.

What to experience

A handful of things feel distinctly Gothenburg.

- Take a Paddan canal boat tour through the old moat and harbor, ducking under bridges built too low for standing passengers — a Gothenburg tradition since the 1930s.
- Catch the ferry from Saltholmen out to the car-free southern archipelago for a swim and a seafood lunch on the rocks.
- Watch the sunset over the harbor from the top of Göteborgsutkiken, nicknamed "the Lipstick" for its shape.
- Join the crowds at Way Out West, the August music festival held in Slottsskogen each summer.
- Browse the craft workshops inside Kronhuset, one of the city's oldest buildings, still home to working artisans.

Day trips

Gothenburg's coast and countryside make easy day trips, from car-free islands to historic fortress towns.

- The southern archipelago (Styrsö, Vrångö, Brännö): about 30–45 minutes by ferry from the Saltholmen tram terminus; car-free islands with swimming spots, fishing villages, and seafood cafés — the easiest and most popular day out.
- A Kungälv and its Bohus Fortress: about 30 minutes by bus; a medieval ruin above the Nordre River, good for a half day combined with the town.
- B Alingsås: about 40 minutes by train; a lakeside town regarded as the birthplace of the Swedish fika break, with well-preserved wooden townhouses.
- C Marstrand: about 1 hour by bus or car; a small fortress island on the Bohuslän coast, known for sailing regattas and its 17th-century Carlsten Fortress.
- D Varberg: about 1 hour by train; a coastal town with a moated fortress, sandy beaches, and one of Sweden's oldest bathhouses.

Getting there

- By air: Landvetter Airport (GOT), about 25 km east of the center, is the main gateway with direct flights across Europe. The Flygbussarna airport coach runs to the center in about 20 minutes; a taxi takes about 25–30 minutes. Landvetter Airport
- By train: Göteborg Centralstation has frequent high-speed trains to Stockholm (about 3 hours), plus connections south to Malmö and Copenhagen (about 3.5–4 hours) and north to Oslo. SJ national rail
- By bus: Long-distance coaches use Nils Ericson Terminalen, next to Central Station, with services to Stockholm, Malmö, Oslo, and Copenhagen.
- By ferry: Stena Line runs ferries to Frederikshavn in Denmark and Kiel in Germany, docking close to the city center — a scenic option from mainland Europe.

Getting around

- Public transit: Västtrafik runs an extensive tram (spårvagn) and bus network covering the whole city. Tap a contactless bank card or phone directly on the reader when boarding — the ticket covers 90 minutes with free transfers — or buy in advance through the Västtrafik To Go app. Västtrafik journey planner
- Taxi / ride-hailing: Regular taxis and ride-hailing apps operate throughout the city; fares vary between companies, so confirm the price before you go.
- On foot / cycling: The center is compact and flat enough to walk between most sights. Styr & Ställ bike-share stations are common, and dedicated cycle lanes make cycling a genuinely practical way to get around.

Getting around on foot & by bike

WALKABILITY

High

The center is flat, compact, and easy to explore entirely on foot, with trams filling in the longer stretches.

CYCLING INFRASTRUCTURE

High

Cycling is genuinely practical, with dedicated lanes and citywide Styr & Ställ bike-share stations, though a few hills near Haga and Linné take extra effort.

Driving

- Is a car worth it?: Skip it in the city — trams and walking cover the center easily. A car helps only for reaching the wider Bohuslän coast or inland lakes at your own pace.
- Parking: Paid parking operates in most central areas by day; look for parking garages near Nordstan or Avenyn, paid via the EasyPark app or a meter.
- Restrictions: A congestion tax applies on entry to the city center on weekdays; cameras automatically log rental and foreign-registered vehicles, which are billed by post afterward, so budget for it if you drive in.

Food & drink

Gothenburg's food culture centers on West Coast seafood — shrimp, oysters, and mussels appear on menus everywhere, especially the classic open shrimp sandwich (räksmörgås). Feskekörka is the place to try it fresh, or pick up a picnic lunch at Saluhallen, a 19th-century market hall with butchers, bakeries, and small kitchens under one glass roof.

Fika, the Swedish coffee-and-pastry break, is taken seriously here — a cinnamon bun and coffee mid-morning or mid-afternoon is a normal part of the day, not a tourist ritual.

Safety & health

Gothenburg is a safe city for travelers, with violent crime rare in the areas visitors frequent. The main risks are petty theft and pickpocketing around Nordstan shopping center, Central Station, and on crowded trams — keep bags zipped and phones out of back pockets. Nightlife around Avenyn can get lively on weekend nights, though it is generally not dangerous.

History

King Gustav II Adolf founded Gothenburg in 1621 as a fortified trading port, laying it out on a Dutch canal grid to secure Sweden's only outlet to the North Sea. Dutch, German, and Scottish merchants settled here, and their influence still shows in the street plan and in Kronhuset, built in the 1640s as an arsenal and grain store for a city that expected to be besieged.

New Älvsborg, on an island at the river mouth, was built soon after to guard the harbor from Danish attack; boat tours run out to it in summer.

In the 18th century the Swedish East India Company brought tea, porcelain, and silk from Asia through the port, a trade now documented at City Museum of Gothenburg, housed in the company's former headquarters. Shipbuilding and industry dominated the 19th and 20th centuries, and Gothenburg has since turned its old shipyards and warehouses into cultural and residential districts.
