TRAVEL GUIDE

Tripomatic

Overview

Kobe is a port city of about 1.5 million people on Osaka Bay, with green mountains rising right behind the centre. It opened to foreign trade in 1868, and the Western-style houses, the Chinatown and the harbour front still show that history.

Kobe suits a relaxed trip of two or three days. The main sights are close together, and the hot springs of Arima and the Mt. Rokko night view are easy add-ons. Osaka and Kyoto are less than an hour away by train. Kobe is also the home of Kobe beef and of Japan's biggest sake district.

When to visit

May and October are the most comfortable months. Autumn colours on Mt. Rokko are famous. Summer is hot and humid. The rainy season in the Kansai region usually runs from early June to mid-July, and typhoons can disrupt transport in late summer and autumn. Winter is cool and mostly dry.

The main event is the Kobe Luminarie, a light festival held in winter. It started in 1995 to bring hope to the city after the earthquake. Check the dates on the official Luminarie page.

These trips are ordered from the closest to the farthest.

- A Osaka: about 20 minutes by JR Special Rapid train from Sannomiya to Osaka Station. It is a large city with many shops, restaurants and nightlife.

Where to explore

Nearby destinations with their own guides:

- West along the coast: Himeji and Awaji Island.
- East, in Kansai: Osaka and Kyoto.

Getting there

- By air: Kobe Airport (UKB) is on an island off the city. It has domestic flights and some flights to Seoul, Shanghai and Taipei. The Port Liner train reaches Sannomiya in about 18 minutes for ¥340. Most long-haul visitors use Kansai International Airport (KIX). The train takes about 95 minutes to Sannomiya via Osaka Station and costs about ¥1,740. A high-speed Bay Shuttle ferry takes about 30 minutes between the two airports and costs ¥1,880 one way.
- By train: Sannomiya is the main hub for JR, Hankyu and Hanshin lines. From Osaka Station, the JR Special Rapid takes about 21 minutes. The Shinkansen stops at Shin-Kobe Station, a short subway ride north of Sannomiya. It takes about 160 minutes from Tokyo by Nozomi and 12 minutes from Shin-Osaka. See JR West for tickets and timetables.

Getting around

- Subway and trains: The Kobe Municipal Subway links Shin-Kobe and Sannomiya. At the gates, tap an IC card such as ICOCA or Suica, or a contactless Visa, JCB, American Express, Diners Club, Discover or UnionPay card. The Port Liner serves the islands and the airport. See the Kobe City Transportation Bureau for subway and bus tickets.
- City Loop bus: This tourist bus runs south from Sannomiya to Chinatown, Meriken Park, Port Tower and Harborland. It runs north to Kitano and the Nunobiki Ropeway. A ride costs ¥300 and a one-day pass costs ¥800. Pay when you board with cash or a prepaid IC card.
- Mt. Rokko: The Rokko Cable Car runs from Rokko Cable Shita Station until about 21:00 and costs ¥590 one way. A bus then goes along the mountaintop. The Rokko Arima Ropeway links the mountain to Arima Onsen in about 12 minutes for ¥1,010 one way.
- On foot: The centre is compact. Streets slope up towards Mt. Rokko, for example in Kitano. Most main sights are within a short walk of Sannomiya.

Getting around on foot & by bike

WALKABILITY

High

The central sights around Sannomiya, Chinatown, Kitano and the harbour are within walking distance of each other.

CYCLING INFRASTRUCTURE

Moderate

The waterfront is flat, but streets slope up towards Mt. Rokko.

Driving

- Driving side: Traffic keeps to the left in Japan.
- Licence: Japan accepts only an International Driving Permit under the 1949 Geneva Convention. Licences from Switzerland, Germany, France, Belgium, Monaco and Taiwan need an official Japanese translation from JAF. These documents are valid for one year from your entry into Japan.
- Is a car worth it?: Not for Kobe itself. Trains, the subway and buses cover all the main sights.
- Tolls: Expressways charge distance-based tolls. Rental cars often include an ETC card for automatic payment.

Food & drink

- Kobe beef: This is a strict brand. The cattle are Tajima cattle bred and raised in Hyogo Prefecture, and the meat must reach a high marbling grade. Genuine Kobe beef is expensive, so check that the menu names it as Kobe beef.
- Where to eat: Chinatown near Motomachi has more than 100 Chinese restaurants and shops. Sannomiya and Motomachi have many other restaurants, and Harborland has waterfront dining.
- Sake in Nada: Nada, east of the centre, is Japan's top sake-producing area. Several breweries have free museums. The Hakutsuru Sake Brewery Museum is open 9:30 to 16:30 and has a tasting at its shop. It is about 10 minutes from Sannomiya by Hanshin train to Sumiyoshi Station, then a short walk. Some tours, such as at Kobe Shushinkan, need an online reservation.

Safety & health

Kobe is very safe for visitors, and serious crime against tourists is rare. The main risks are natural. Earthquakes happen in Japan, so follow staff instructions and local alerts. Typhoons can disrupt transport in late summer and autumn. July and August are hot and humid, so drink water and rest in the shade.

The Japan Visitor Hotline, 050-3816-2787, is open 24 hours a day in English, Chinese and Korean. It helps with emergencies and medical questions.

History

- Ancient roots: Ikuta Shrine is one of Japan's oldest shrines, founded in the 3rd century according to tradition.
- Port opening: Hyogo Port opened to foreign trade on 1 January 1868. Foreign merchants settled in the city, and their houses still stand in Kitano Ijinkan.
- Modern city: Kobe was founded as a city on 1 April 1889 and became one of Japan's main ports.
- 1995 earthquake: At 05:46 on 17 January 1995, the Great Hanshin earthquake hit the region. It killed more than 6,000 people and damaged most of the port. Earthquake Memorial Park keeps part of the broken quay, and the Luminarie began that year to bring hope to the city.

Kobe's Absolute Essentials

Kobe's landscape spans from the 108-meter Port Tower and the Harborland waterfront to the historical Kitano Ijinkan district, home to late 19th-century foreign residences. The city features Japan's first mosque, built in 1935, and the ancient Ikuta Shrine. Natural sites include the Nunobiki Falls, accessible via the Shin-Kobe Ropeway, and the Taisho-era Sorakuen Garden. Culinary highlights center on Nankin-machi Chinatown and world-renowned Kobe beef, while the Former Foreign Settlement preserves Meiji-era architecture like the 1880 American Consulate building.
